I was born in 1978. That makes me the other person in the world not to have read the Monster Manual until recently. So I had to start at the beginning. Where is the earliest source you guys have read the Monster Manual? A: The earliest source I can recall that I read the Monster Manual is for AD&D 1e. I think that it was in the era just prior to the Elemental Evil storyline. I remember playing Greyhawk, and thinking the dragons in there were too powerful. I remember having to play kobolds because the kobolds had no ranged attacks, and my non-U.S. gaming group were going to complain about that. I remember having to do some of the encounters in a different order, just because I couldn't find the kobold stronghold. But I remember enjoying the game immensely, so it's probably my favorite old school game. As for what was in the Monster Manual, AD&D 1e was published about two years before the original D&D boxed set was printed. So I believe that most of it was in the Monster Manual. A: For OSRIC it was the AD&D Monster Manual 2e. Now I'm honestly not sure about earlier editions. A: For OD&D, it was Greyhawk II, with no monsters in the original Monster Manual. There was no cover (or front page) picture, just a new, fancy border
